

DRINK AND THE VICTORIANS
A HISTORY OF THE BRITISH TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT

PAGING NOTE: Pamphlets, journals, and periodicals are paged using the number of the item on the list below, and the call number 71-03051. Books are cataloged individually – get author/title info below, and search SearchWorks for online record and call number.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

This collection has been formed by the amalgamation of two smaller but important collections. The larger part, probably about three-quarters of the whole, was formed by William Hoyle of Claremont, Bury, near Manchester. The other part was formerly in the Joseph Livesey Library, Sheffield, and many of the pamphlets carry that library stamp.

The catalogue has three main elements: pamphlets and tracts; books, including a section of contemporary biography; and newspapers, journals and conference reports. There are around 1400 separately published pamphlets and tracts but a series of tracts, or part of a series, has usually been catalogued as one item. The Hoyle collection of pamphlets, is bound in 24 volumes, mostly half black roan, many with his ownership stamp. All the pieces from the Joseph Livesey Library are disbound; so that any item described as "disbound" may be assumed to be from the Livesey collection and all the others, for which a volume and item number are given, from Hoyle's bound collection.

INTRODUCTION

By Brian Harrison Fellow and Tutor in Modern History and Politics, Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

Anyone keen to understand the Victorians can hardly do better than devour Joseph Livesey's Staunch Teetotaler (458) or J.G. Shaw's Life of William Gregson. Temperance Advocate (1072), for temperance history offers the clue to a moralistic society that did not yet separate religion from politics. Its key unlocks understanding of an increasingly prosperous society groping towards the idea that the poor need not always be with us. It gets us inside an urban society pioneering its response to the social problems accompanying growing affluence and increased leisure.

Nineteenth-century Britain turned against cruelty and violence of all kinds, repudiating ill-treatment of women, criminals, lunatics, animals, children and slaves. Energy and hope were marshalled for the humanitarian crusade in ways that now seem unfamiliar. If, for instance, master ill-treated slave, abolition of slavery was the answer; if the farmer neglected his cattle, then he must be educated or punished into kindness; if woman turned to prostitution, she must be "reclaimed"; and if the drunkard beat his wife, drunkenness must be frontally attacked. This highly moralistic diagnosis of social problems gave far less attention to environmental pressures and structural problems within the economy than would now be fashionable.

To many Victorians drunkenness seemed at the root of many of the big city's evils: crime, violence, family discord, social unrest, ignorance and poverty. Temperance reformers from the late 1820s onwards attacked the problem head on by trying to get drinkers to abstain. Each individual faced an apparently simple choice: stay with the dissolute on this side of the road, and squander resources in what one mid-Victorian temperance cartoon saw as "the losings bank", that is, the pub: or, accompany the prudent across the road into all the affluence and respectability of "the winnings (that is, the savings) bank".

But by the 1850s many temperance reformers had become impatient with the teetotaler's simple but slow-acting emphasis on moral choice, and in 1853 the United Kingdom Alliance was formed to promote prohibition. The Alliance soon devised what was called the "Permissive Bill", which would ban the trade from an area when two thirds of its ratepayers voted to implement it. To many reformers, including J.S. Mill and (in his old age) the pioneer teetotaler Joseph Livesey, this seemed a tyrannical interference with individual liberty, and even a hindrance to the moral growth that every good Liberal hoped for. In the resultant controversies (see 142, 370, 507, 925, 975 for examples), temperance reformers often gave as good as they got, and were capable even of unhorsing John Stuart Mill on some points - as in the writings of T.H. Barker (43-4) or Samuel Fothergill (261).

In some ways the Victorian temperance world now seems less alien than it appeared to me in 1961, when as a young graduate student I began studying the movement. In the 1960s alcoholism and street violence seemed in full retreat before expanded welfare and growing affluence, and environmental diagnoses of poverty were well entrenched; yet during the past decade the drug problem has re-emerged with a vengeance. I remember being surprised, in the early 1970s, to find that people were interested in my Drink and the Victorians, a subject I had decided to study from purely academic motives, for the light it could shed on current social problems. Moralistic politics, too, have reappeared; since 1979, British governments have been positively Gladstonian in their zest for thrift and self-improvement, their eagerness for a property-owning democracy, their emphasis on the moral benefits of choice.

So this remarkable collection will interest a wide range of scholars, and I wish I'd known about it when writing my book. The major national libraries - the British Library in London, for instance, and the Bodleian Library in Oxford - are relatively weak in the temperance area. In the 1960s the major temperance collections were held by the United Kingdom Alliance, the British National Temperance League (duplicates from whose collection in Sheffield are included here) and the Goldsmith's Library; if I had known about it, I would certainly have wanted to consult this collection as well.

No such hoard is ever likely to appear on the market again. Much of it was accumulated by William Hoyle (1831-86), a Lancashire cotton-spinner who became the temperance movement's mid-Victorian expert on the statistical aspect of the question, and brought intelligence, energy and resource to the whole enterprise. His Our National Resources and how they are Wasted (1871 - see 336-8, 951) was important. This collection reflects the outlook of a man who was alert to everything important that was going on between the 1860s and 1880s in the world of prohibition and temperance; it also contains items from the related movements against smoking (28, 86, 88-9, 192, 284, 304, 388, 491, 597, 629, 649, 700-2) and meat-eating (517); everything likely to promote a continuing campaign has been carefully husbanded. Many of the books were presented to Hoyle, and some of their interesting inscriptions illustrate the deep respect temperance reformers felt for him.

The world of self-improvement and respectability did not separate recreation from good works; indeed, temperance readily became a hobby for its practitioners - a private world, a hidden culture - and its publications were hoarded for enjoyment as well as for usefulness. These include temperance almanacks (100, 1148, 1202), readers (936), annuals (1042), songbooks (231, 334, 947, 1111, 1131, 1164, 1197), reciters (283, 817, 884, 1009, 1091), handbooks (917, 968), primers (1018), lesson-books (1011, 1054) and even temperance encyclopaedias (1047). In the absence of other media, this was a period of essay-writing, pamphleteering and periodical-launching, driven on by an almost euphoric faith in the power of the printed word; these were the great days of the Victorian provincial press.

Provincial mid-Victorian Liberalism flourished on the continuous interaction between the written and the spoken word. Temperance reformers, most of them Liberals, published their sermons (e.g. 183, 277, 297), their lectures (421, 444, 456, 993, 1019), their public debates (293, 365-6, 486, 645), and the proceedings of their public inquiries (584, 658, 848, 1049, 1065, 1199), conventions and conferences (270, 672, 805, 1035, 1040, 1085, 1087, 1136, 1182-4, 1209, 1224).

Frustrated ambition and pent-up energies fuelled the many public temperance controversies (not all of them friendly) - about the Gothenburg system for municipal management, for example (289, 431) and about compensation for confiscated licences (477). This literature was by no means always written by the mindlessly sentimental: much of it is gritty, spiky, angry material, hostile to a London-based and aristocratic Establishment, passionately concerned about social problems that are seen as both urgent and destructive of material and moral welfare.

The main strength of the present collection lies in its wealth of mid-Victorian controversial and ephemeral temperance material, though it also contains valuable items from earlier decades (845, 891, for example), as well as important later material, much of it retrospective, biographical or autobiographical. The teetotaler, like Pilgrim, saw himself as struggling through a life of snares and temptations, and the analogy with Pilgrim's Progress moulded many a temperance memoir, as the title of Thomas Whittaker's well-known Life's Battles in Temperance Armour (1112) reveals. By 1860 it seemed worth publishing the key (864) to a picture containing the portraits of 120 temperance reformers, and a retrospective mood sets in during the 1880s and 1890s as the movement prepares itself for its long decline.

Temperance ephemera were vulnerable. Victorians readily consigned annual reports, leaflets, lectures, sermons and tracts to the wastepaper basket, and little of what survived got past the salvage man during the second world war. Temperance was, at least in its earliest decades, too provincial and even vulgar in tone to interest the great copyright libraries. The temperance movement's twentieth-century decline made things worse. So items like 170, 650 or even 193 may well be unique; yet obscure as they are, they reveal much of what temperance meant in practical terms to ordinary people in their localities.

The collection contains the well-known classics of temperance propaganda such as Burne's Teetotalers Companion (853), Livesey's Malt Lecture (444, 991), R.B. Grindrod's Bacchus (928) and Beecher's Six Sermons on Intemperance (64). The major items of Victorian temperance historiography are also there - notably Winskill (1123-5), the Webbs (1106) and Dawson Burns (8602). These are complemented by the earlier, less grandiose and now scarce histories of the movement: Morris (1010), Teare (671), Walmsley (1101), Dearden (176, 891-2) and Stephenson (1084).

The movement's vigorous torrents of propaganda branched out in several directions, each with its own leading exponents, all well represented here: religious (70, 75, 162, 168, 171, 240, 271, 385-6, 409-10, 496-9, 501-2, 579, 587, 594-8, 600, 602, 621-2, 696, 978, 980, 1035, 1059, 1061-2, 1085, 1119, 1173), criminological (187, 324, 344, 404-5, 454), economic (262-4, 328-31, 336-41, 345-9, 351, 355-7, 360-2, 394-6, 1039, 1069) and medical (10-15, 20, 52, 71, 120-1, 150, 196, 216-7, 322, 332-3, 466, 473, 492-4, 512, 514-5, 674, 774, 792, 868-70, 960, 1014, 1016, 1018, 1108, 1116). The collection also provides good coverage of the Sunday closing issues.

Particularly interesting are the items relating to the important Ulster temperance reformer John Edgar (199-212), the rich collection of William Hoyle's important publications on the economic aspect of temperance (324-362, 951-43), the scarce later writings of Joseph Livesey (443458, 992), the valuable collection of the United Kingdom Alliance's informative mid-Victorian (prohibitionist) annual reports (735-761) and publications (558-64, 764-8), the rare items on the Sunday closing movement (125-141, 871) and the volumes of temperance tracts (681, 716, 1081, 1090-2) - evocative material that rarely becomes available in this ...

Perhaps most valuable of all, because so central to the movement and so rarely available in bound volumes, are the temperance periodicals. These range from the ephemeral and therefore scarce venture that lasts for but a few numbers - Nos. 884, 1154, 1163, 1225, for example - to the major organs of a powerful movement that were published by national organisations like the Band of Hope, the National and British Temperance Leagues and the Church of England Temperance Society (Nos. 1130, 1138-9, 1142-3, 1149, 1165, 1167-8, 1174, 1178, 1177, 1181., 1188, 1192). Such items rarely come on the market nowadays, yet they chronicle the movement's day-to-day history; their vivid engravings, their fiercely sectarian correspondence-columns and their earthy apologetics all combine to illuminate important aspects of nineteenth-century popular culture and religion.

The discovery of this collection gives students of the Victorian age a major opportunity. Any library lucky enough to acquire it will greatly reinforce its holdings on the history of nineteenth-century social reform, nonconformity, provincial and popular culture - for we are nowadays increasingly aware that to all of these, the Victorian temperance movement was central.

In 1829 he began to take an active interest in the work of temperance, and for twelve years he was among the most powerful and conspicuous of the public advocates of that cause in Ireland. He began the campaign by opening his dining-room window and pouring into the gutter the remains of a gallon of whisky which he had got for the use of his family. In 1859 he visited America to help with the relief of his countrymen during the Irish famine. He was secretary of the Ulster Temperance Society.

1142. BRITISH TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE AND JOURNAL. No. 1 - Jan. 15, 1839 - No. 12. - December, 1839 + supplement Jan. 1840. Folio. Good in new cloth. Douglas: Isle of Man. This journal represented an attempt by the tee-total societies in the North of England to stay in the publishing business - the tee-total papers in Manchester and Warrington had faded and the 'Preston Advocate' and the 'Leeds Advocate and Herald' had amalgamated in January 1838 in order to try and avoid a similar fate. The Isle of Man was chosen as the place of publication probably because of a loophole in the postage regulations, giving free postage to the United Kingdom.

1143. BRITISH TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE AND JOURNAL OF THE BRITISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE. Volumes for 1891-93 (bound together in contemporary half calf - rebacked); 1905-1908 (in the original cloth); 1911-1928 (in 5 volumes in green for brown] cloth). 4to. London: British Temperance League.

1147. BIJRNE, Peter. The Tee-totallers' Companion. Royal 8vo. London: Arthur Hall, 1847 [but printed in Ipswich]. The production of a 27 year old silk-weaver of Macclesfield, Cheshire, whose only education was at a Sunday-school - Burne's material was prepared for publication by Dr. Lees. The author travelled through Lancashire and Cheshire with a band of young men acting a temperance 'morality' play - "The Trial of John Barleycorn". In 1849 Burne set out for California in search of gold and died in Texas of cholera.

1148. [BIJRNE, Rev. Dawson - editor] Grahams Temperance Guide, Handbook & Almanac (and Diary), for 1873, 1875, 1876 and 1878. 4 vols. 8vo, binding - lettered cloth. 1174. LIVESEY, Joseph. The Moral Reformer (general title). No. 1 - Jan.6th 1838 No. 23 - February 1839 (all published). Folio. A good copy in the original dark ribbed cloth. Preston: J. Livesey, 1838/39. Livesey's attempt to wean the uncommitted mass of temperance advocates away from the doctrines of the moderates as exemplified by the 'Penny Magazine'; it was a losing battle and in February 1839 Livesey ceased publication - it had been continued "...this far at a sacrifice too great to be further extended".

1175. LIVESEY, Joseph. The tee-total Progressionist, or Advocate of Temperance and Physical, Medical, Moral, Social and Religious Reform". General title with large pictorial woodcut, reading "First Yearly Part ... Consisting of Twelve Numbers and containing seventeen engravings, plus 12 individual parts each 16pp., plus general title for "Second Yearly Part - Consisting of Twelve Numbers and containing seven engravings", plus 12 separate parts. 4to, in the original brown ribbed cloth. Preston: J. Livesey, n.d. [1852]. In August 1851 John Cassels "Teetotal Times" ceased publication and Livesey "feeling the need for an independent journal" issued the Progressionist but, due to ill-health (he lived for another 32 years) handed it over to W. Horsell of London, although Livesey continued to be a contributor.

1176. LIVESEY, William (son of Joseph Livesey) A series of ten letters all written to Dr Axon; dated 1900 and 1903. All substantial letters, some of eight. pages, none less than three. The 1900 letters are mostly concerned with the current progress and politics of tee-totalism and with legislation to control the sale of liquor (particularly to children). The 1,063 letters are, in the main, concerned with his father's work and, more particularly, the disposal of his father's earlier works, some of which he is sending to the Manchester Reference Library and some (at Axon's suggestion) to the British Museum.

1198. REPORT OF THE PUBLIC MEETING IN PLYMOUTH. Held in the Free-School, Coburg St ... Sept. 1878. ...Discussing the Comparative Advantages of Moderation and Teetotal Societies. 4to. Unbound pamphlet, 26pp. Devonport: J. Heydon, 1838. Includes a quotation in a letter, from the Rev. F. Beardsall, on the word "Tee-total" - ..."The term, rejected by some, is a Lancashire provincialism; it is used where persons are discharged from a situation, with the understanding that they will never be employed by the master again, so that Drink has got the tee-total discharge". Appears to be unrecorded.

1199. REPORT BY THE COMMITTEE ON INTEMPERANCE for the Lower House of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury (Peoples edition). 8vo. Manchester: United Kingdom Alliance [1871] The report was issued in 1869 but the United Kingdom Alliance issued (in 1871) a shilling Peoples' edition. Temperance writers regarded the report as a landmark in temperance history; the United Kingdom Alliance regarded the 'enlistment' of the Church of England as a major triumph. The Church of England's position was [incidentally] a compromise between tee-totalism and moderation.
