

SYMPOSIUM ON THE NEXT WAVE OF SURVEILLANCE REFORM

January 25-26, 2016

PARTICIPANTS

TIMOTHY H. EDGAR is a senior fellow at the Watson Institute for International Studies and Public Affairs at Brown University. He was the first-ever director of privacy and civil liberties for the White House National Security Staff during President Obama's first term, focusing on cyber security, open government, surveillance, and data privacy. He is a contributing editor to Lawfare. Under George W. Bush, Edgar was the first deputy for civil liberties for the director of national intelligence, from 2006 to 2009, and the national security counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union, from 2001 to 2006. Edgar clerked for Judge Sandra Lynch, United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit. He is a graduate of Harvard Law School and Dartmouth College.

MIEKE EOYANG, vice president for the National Security Program at Third Way, runs a team that works on every major national security issue, from the details of military personnel policy to the legal framework for going to war. She has expertise in intelligence oversight and electronic surveillance reform and also studies partisan perception on national security. Before joining Third Way, Eoyang had a long career on Capitol Hill. Most recently she served as Representative Anna Eshoo's (D-CA) chief of staff (D-CA) and was the defense policy adviser to Senator Edward M. Kennedy (D-MA) during the Iraq war, the subcommittee staff director on the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, and a professional staff member on the House Armed Services Committee. Eoyang, originally from Monterey, California, earned her JD at the University of California's Hastings College of the Law and graduated from Wellesley College.

JACK GOLDSMITH is a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution, where he cochairs the working group on National Security, Technology, and Law, and is the Henry L. Shattuck Professor of Law at Harvard University. He previously served as assistant attorney general, Office of Legal Counsel (2003–4) and special counsel to the general counsel of the Department of Defense (2002–3). Goldsmith writes on national security law, presidential power, international law, and Internet regulation. His books include Power and Constraint: The Accountable Presidency after 9/11 (2012), The Terror Presidency: Law and Judgment inside the Bush Administration (2009), Who Controls the Internet: Illusions of a Borderless World (with Tim Wu) (2006), and The Limits of International Law (with Eric Posner) (2005). He blogs on national security matters at Lawfare. Goldsmith is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He holds a JD from Yale Law School, a BA and an MA from Oxford University, and a BA from Washington & Lee University.

JOHN C. "CHRIS" INGLIS is a the Robert and Mary M. Looker Distinguished Visiting Professor for Cyber Studies at the US Naval Academy and former deputy director of the National Security Agency (2006–4). He served nine years active and twenty-one years reserve in the US Air Force from which he retired as a brigadier general and command pilot in 2006. Inglis holds degrees in engineering and computer science from the US Air Force Academy, Columbia University, the Johns Hopkins University, and George Washington University. He is the recipient of three US Presidential Rank Awards, the USAF Distinguished Service Medal, the Boy Scouts of America Distinguished Eagle Scout Award, the Director of National Intelligence Distinguished Service Medal, and the President's National Security Medal.

JEFF KOSSEFF is an assistant professor of cybersecurity law at the US Naval Academy. He practiced cyber security and privacy law at Covington & Burling LLP and clerked for Judge Milan D. Smith Jr. of the US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and Judge Leonie M. Brinkema of the US District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. Kosseff is a graduate of Georgetown University's Law Center and the University of Michigan. Before becoming a lawyer, he was a journalist for the Oregonian, where he covered technology and Congress. Jeff was a finalist for the Pulitzer Prize for national reporting and a recipient of the George Polk Award.

DAVID KRIS is general counsel of Intellectual Ventures. From 2009 to 2011, he was assistant attorney general for national security at the US Department of Justice. From 2003 to 2009 he held various positions at Time Warner, including deputy general counsel and chief ethics and compliance officer. From 1992 to 2003, he was an attorney and then associate deputy attorney general at the Department of Justice. He is the author of several papers on national security and coauthor of the treatise National Security Investigations and Prosecutions. He graduated from Harvard Law School in 1991.

JULIAN SANCHEZ is a senior fellow at the Cato Institute, where he studies issues at the intersection of technology, privacy, and civil liberties, with a focus on national security and intelligence surveillance. Before coming to Cato in 2009, Sanchez covered these issues as a writer for Reason magazine, The Economist, and the technology news site Ars Technica. He is a founding editor of the policy blog Just Security.

NICHOLAS WEAVER is a researcher at the International Computer Science Institute in Berkeley, where he focuses on network security and network measurement, including network intrusion detection, malware, online criminality, and censorship measurement.

BENJAMIN WITTES cochairs the Hoover Institution Working Group on National Security, Technology and Law, is a senior fellow in governance studies at the Brookings Institution and codirector of the Harvard Law School–Brookings Project on Law and Security. His most recent publication is Speaking the Law (Hoover Institution Press 2013), cowritten with Kenneth Anderson. He is the author of Detention and Denial: The Case for Candor after Guantanamo (Brookings Institution Press 2011) and coeditor of Constitution 3.0: Freedom and Technological Change (Brookings Institution Press 2011). He is also the author of Law and the Long War: The Future of Justice in the Age of Terror, published in June 2008 by Penguin Press, and the editor of the 2009 Brookings book Legislating the War on Terror: An Agenda for Reform. He cofounded and cowrites the Lawfare blog (<http://www.lawfareblog.com/>), which is devoted to nonideological discussions of hard national security choices.